There are files that can customize and fine-tune the performance of the chassis, engine, and cab, for instance. John Deere Electronic Data Link drivers: This is software that allows a computer to talk to the tractor. The EDL is the required interface which allows the Service Advisor laptop to actually communicate with the tractor controllers, the source told me. john deere service advisor 90% works with china clone.a direct download of the sa software is available here.its the same one that works with the official machines.its the same one that works with the ebdl stuff. to install, you need to install the edl from the official site. 2. go to c:program files\service advisor\svds\jdet.exe.3. run sa, it will start downloading the firmware (you can use the internet connection to download it). sa will download the xvds drivers to the laptop, and when sa has finished, it will restart automatically.i need to download the latest firmware file before i use sa.i cant use the official edl i got here, i found the edl here.the download version is much faster. i tried to use an old version but it didnt work, i have to use the latest one. i have the ebdl, and it does the job. i can use the ebdl for all kinds of stuff, but the official edl is much more safe and the software is more stable.so no more problem with the sa c:program files\service advisor\svds\jdet.xjet firmware for the ebdl is here.if you have no edl, you can buy a xjet 4. put the xjet into the tractor, and it will be ready to use. if you don't have the diagnostic hardware, you can use the built in diagnostic tool, or download the driver. please note that the diagnostic tool is limited, and will only allow you to do the following tests: please note that even with appropriate hardware that meets all the aforementioned minimum requirements, customers who purchase the customer service advisor downloaded application may, due to port access, experience installation or performance challenges if other diagnostic software is installed on the same computer. 5ec8ef588b
